INDUSTRIES SHOULD BE PROTECTED.

Our production of dyestuff is not what it should be, a year after the war cut off the supply from Germany. This country had depended on Germany for aniline dyes made from coal tar, and when the blockade of German ports was established by Great Britain, our manufacturers found themselves deprived of coloring material, with no concern prepared to undertake the production of the Big capital has hesitated to engage in the enterprise, although the present prices for the dyes is most inviting. As a result, the industry has developed slowly.

Had the party in power in the nation been favorable to a protective tariff, capital would have been tempt ingly invited to invest by assurance of a long period of exclusive control of the American market. A tariff would have been applied high enough to prevent the Germans, on the res toration of peace, tavading the domes tic field at ruinous prices.

The present war has demonstrated the necessity of the United States having such a diversity of industries as to be independent of the manufacturers of other countries. The one way by which this can be attained is to return to the protective theory.

The mayor has a stenographer at city expense and one of the commissioners is attended by an amenuensis With these high salaries, no economies are enforced. The salaries of heads of departments are boosted by a method which smacks of sharp practice, and from top to bottom there is looseness in city affairs. The commissioner of public safety should devote all his time to the office. Instead of so doing, he holds down his old job and gives the city a part of his labors. He should be the head of the police department, and save the city a big salary. But he falls in that particular.

Our city commissioners remind one of kid-gloved gentry. Their one ambition seems to be to draw their huge salaries and hold on to every cent they receive.

Evidently they have taken a wrong view of the intent and purpose of the law creating a commission form of government. The salaries were made high in the hope that the men called in to office would be not only ornamental bric-a-brac in the city hall, but active heads of departments, directly conducting the affairs of the city and supplanting the many factotums to be found under the old sys-

EXHIBIT VISITOR IS AMAZED.

"Why should I be interested in the working child?" asked a self complacent lady who called at the child labor exhibit in San Francisco the other day.

"Because it touches you at so many points," replied the National Child Labor Committee's exhibit director, Lewis W. Hine. "To begin with, the flowers on your hat were undoubtedly made in a New York tenement, no matter what you paid for them. I have found four-year-old children working on such flowers.
